Trafficking in human beings is the commercial trade of human beings, who are subjected to involuntary acts such as begging, sexual exploitation, or unfree labor. Trafficking involves a process of using physical force, fraud, deception, or other forms of coercion or intimidation to obtain, recruit, harbour, and transport people.

This collection of resources aims to provide relevant sources of information on combating human trafficking and slavery. The sources in this collection are represented by U.S. government websites, those of non-governmental international organizations and reference websites.
